Mystery and the Eastgate

Margaret Rutherford

We are on set with Margaret Rutherford, about to make her first outing as Jane Marple. Playing the star, the author and the spinster, award winning actress Janet Prince pulls us through the story behind the story.

This intriguing new work explores the salacious world of British film in the 1950s and '60s. Starring Janet Prince, who was hailed as 'superb' by the press during the Edinburgh Festival Fringe 2012. Prince takes command of the stage, ensuring that proceedings are a 'delight to behold'. Directed by critically acclaimed theatre director and novelist Stella Duffy. Written by 'whip-lash wit' Philip Meeks, whose theatre and television writing credits include several years as a core writer on "Emmerdale", "Doctors", and the acclaimed play "Twinkle Little Star" (2006).

After a sell out run at the Edinburgh Festival Fringe 2012 and a slew of 4 and 5 star reviews, Murder, Marple and Me hits the road, to reach the wider audience it so deserves. Strictly limited run!

Come and unearth the mystery behind the mystery! Mark the date in your diary, Thursday, February 7. Tickets priced £14. Show time 7.30pm. To book call 01721 725 777.

Actually it's about a vies in the poshest old people's home imaginable.

These antique artistes, or whatever they call singers, musicians and actors once the grease paint has putrefied, are capable of behaving like prima donnas, even before the onrush of Alzheimer's and the inevitable hip replacement.

Scripted by Ronald Harwood, a safe pair of hands in such privileged company, the film has class without being memorable.

Everything is done in the best possible taste. Maggie rather than later, take a dive into fairyland.

They play ex-stars of international opera which tests credulity to its verdant roots. Not that it matters.

There are no surprises. Except one. The rookie director does a magnificent job. "Who he?", you may well ask. None other than the graduate himself, Dustin Hoffman.

Quartet is showing at The Eastgate, Peebles, on Sunday, February 3.

You Can Cook award

PEEBLES based social enterprise 'You Can Cook' have demonstrated they have all the right ingredients for success following the announcement that they are the recipients of the Innovation Voucher Award from Interface, Edinburgh.

You Can Cook were the first social enterprise in Scotland to receive this prestigious award for joint collaboration with Food Innovation with, Abertay University in Dundee.

Bosco Santimano Founder/Director of You Can Cook said: "We are thrilled to bits as we now have the recognition, expertise and evidence from the scientific community. The team at Abertay were brilliant to work with and it was refreshing to come across people from the scientific community who understood our work and were willing to accommodate us in getting the best out of this award".

Interfaces main role is connecting businesses quickly and easily to Scotland's world class expertise, skills and research facilities, it's unique service is designed to address the growing demand from organisations wanting to collaborate with academia.

You Can Cook received support and expertise from Innovation at Abertay where they investigated a cross selection of recipes being used by You Can Cook at their "Energised Lunches" and other workshops in relation to nutritional balance, healthy eating and health claims, and Scottish Government recommendations.
